The word photovoltaic comes from "photo" (light) and "voltaic" (electricity). Photovoltaic (PV) cells are made of special materials called semiconductors such as silicon. Basically, when light strikes the cell, a certain portion of it is absorbed within the semiconductor material.

Photovoltaic cells may operate under sunlight or artificial light. In addition to producing energy, they can be used as a photodetector (for example infrared detectors), detecting light or other electromagnetic radiation near the visible range, or measuring light intensity. The operation of a PV cell requires three basic attributes:

In the Old English corpus as a whole the spelling with o appears to be somewhat under half as frequent as that with a. Many Northumbrian and Mercian texts normally have the o-spelling; it is common in early West Saxon texts, but the a-spelling heavily predominates in later texts. Middle English, a spelling with o occurs mainly in texts from the west midland counties ...
