Louboutin's trademark No. 3,361,597, covering "a lacquered red sole on footwear" for women's high fashion designer shoes, was registered with the US Patent and Trademark Office in 2008. The company has used the design since 1992, according to the registration. The mark was largely upheld by the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in 2012 following a ...

The red sole was born one afternoon when a prototype of a shoe inspired by Andy Warhol's "Flowers" arrived in the hands of Louboutin, who found the shoe a little dull. Fortunately, an assistant was painting her nails red at the time of the arrival of the shoe, and Louboutin had the unique idea of using it to cover the dreary black sole; and so ...

Red Wing Shoe Company has always had a clear, but simple purpose: to be a great organization that makes a difference in people's lives.

Why do Louboutin shoes have red soles? One could call it a stroke of genius... Once upon a time in 1992, the illustrious designer was reviewing prototypes in his Parisian workshop. He was pleased with what he saw save for one "sole" detail. The shoes appeared heavier than in his drawings on account of the black soles, which appeared clunky ...

Louboutin grabbed the nail polish--it was red--from the assistant and slathered it on the sole of the prototype. "Then it popped," he recalled, "and I thought, This is the drawing!"

Apparently, he got the idea when he painted the bottom of a black shoe with red nail polish, and in 2008, Louboutin applied for trademark registration for the red shoe bottom ("Red Sole Mark"). In 2011, Louboutin filed a lawsuit against Yves Saint Laurent (YSL), seeking to enjoin the high fashion competitor from selling its monochrome red ...

The red soles" origin story is the stuff of fashion folklore: In 1993, two years after launching his independent business, Louboutin designed a shoe collection inspired by Andy Warhol's "Flowers" lithograph. The prototype came back featuring a floral motif on a pink stacked heel, but the design didn't "pop" like Louboutin had hoped.
