Distinguished by its impressive dimensions (50cm high and 66.5cm diameter), the Planetarium automaton presents the Sun and many of the planets of its system visible from the Earth: Mercury, Venus, the Earth - accompanied by its satellite, the Moon -, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn.

For example, Mercury goes around the dial in 88 days, Jupiter about 12 years, while Saturn will take 29 years. The two other planets in our solar system were excluded because the lengths of their orbits would make their movements on the watch imperceptible and impractical - Uranus orbits the sun in 84 Earth years and Neptune makes the trip in ...

This spectacularly innovative watch design, known as Midnight Planetarium, allows you to wear a little piece of the Solar System on your wrist developed by Van Cleef & Arpels in partnership with Dutch watchmaker Christiaan van der Klaauw, the intricate concept replaces hands of a watch with six tiny planets orbiting around a central rose gold Sun.

This watch is a great example of a complicated movement. Also keep in mind this is a wrist watch, so it is a fairly small machine. This fascinating, stunning watch by Van Cleef & Arpels mimics the movement of our Solar System. The Shooting Star tells the hours and minutes.
